

The Crow at the Well

Aesop's Fable

A very thirsty crow found a well with a bucket beside it. But there was only a little water at the bottom of the bucket, and the crow wasn't able to reach it. Finally she got an idea. She dropped pebbles into the bucket, more and more pebbles, until the water got high enough for her to reach it and quench her thirst.

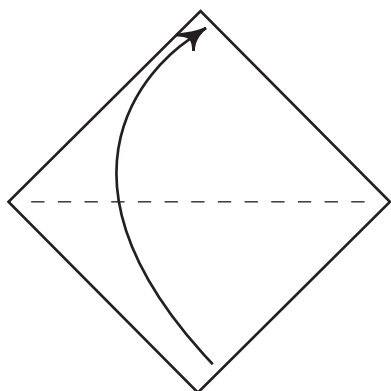

Moral: If you think about something hard,
you can achieve what appears to be impossible.
Necessity is the mother of invention.
